The APS Team Can Help with Pandemic Projects

While staying safer at home during the pandemic, many people are taking the opportunity to clean, declutter and donate unwanted items to charities that need them. During these challenging times in our lives, decluttering is a great way to put things back into our control.

Our clients often tell us that the APS Team's assistance with organizing and helping them declutter has lightened up their mood and given them a more positive mindset for their environment. We know these are trying times but getting organized can be an act of self-care and can impact your wellbeing and quality of life. Let the APS Team help!

Florence & Rudy Blend Their Lives Together with the Help of the APS Team

The team at Aging in Place Transition Services (APS) enjoyed working with Florence & Rudy as they began their lives together. A late in life romance led them to move to a new home and blend their households. The enormity of this task seemed overwhelming, so they enlisted the assistance of the APS Team.

The two lovebirds met while rehearsing a play at the Jewish Community Center, in the production of Dayenu. After dating for about 2 years, they decided they were ready to spend the rest of their lives together. Finding a new place to live was the easy part. Rudy knew it was going to be a challenge to get Florence to move because she had been in her apartment for 32 years. But he had worked with the APS Team before and knew they could make it happen, and more importantly, make Florence happy with the results.

APS owner, Sara Beth Warne, was able to help them choose which furniture pieces to keep for their new home. And for the pieces that weren't going, she assisted in dispersing them to family members, consignment shops and charities. Shopping for new items was an exciting adventure.

"The best part of the whole process was spending the first night in our beautiful new home," said Rudy. "I am thankful for the APS Team for making it happen for us."
